¹ The figures associated with the Babylonian demi-gods vary. The average is roughly 43,000 plus. If they are presumed to be years, they bear no discernable relationship to the biblical ages of the pre-flood patriarchs, the average of which is 881 years. Nonetheless I am curious concerning their possible source. There is certainly abundant evidence that many ancient people used a 360-day calendar for centuries: Assyrians, Babylonians, Chaldeans, China, Egyptians, Greeks, Hebrews, Hindus, Mayas, Persians, Polynesians, and Romans. Moreover there is evidence that the lunar month changed several times during this time from 30 days to 36 days, and then to 29.5 days - the last coinciding with the change of the year from 360 days to 365.25 days c.754 BC. Most scientists and scholars regard these figures as evidence of primitive minds, unable to measure the movement of the heavenly bodies accurately - not as evidence of past changes in the solar system., even though their recorded observations were quite precise.
